

Power of Attorney Revocation Instructions

You must sign this revocation in front of a notary. Once it is signed and notarized, you must make sure that you give a copy of it to everyone who has a copy of your old power of attorney (which is now revoked). This might include: the person named as your agent in the revoked power of attorney, your bank, the county recorder's office, your doctor, or anyone else you think might have a copy of the old power of attorney in their records. If they do not receive a copy of this revocation, they could believe that the power of attorney is still good and could take actions that affect you based on that belief.

Please note that this document is only a revocation and does not create a new power of attorney or name a new agent. You should talk with a lawyer about whether you need a new power of attorney. If you are a senior age 60 or older living in Idaho, you can speak with a lawyer for free through the Senior Legal Hotline, at 1-866-345-0106. The Senior Hotline lawyer can answer questions about powers of attorney and revocations.
